The most modern type of lithium processing plant in the world, Kemerton, in southwest WA and owned by Albemarle Corporation, has undergone significant expansion to double its production capacity.

Albemarle vice president of capital projects in Australia, Josh Rowan, says production at Kemerton is about to significantly increase.

"Albemarle is Australia's largest producer and manufacturer of lithium and our Kemerton plant is about to get a whole lot bigger," he said.

"The Kemerton expansion is a boon for the economy and construction of trains 3 and 4 is set to create over 1000 new jobs across all our major contractors - in construction, engineering, support services and more."
